Here is a throng of fish as they splash about swimming all around...Me! I'm in the water with them and they don't care a wit about it. They don't perceive me as a threat and that's the trick to getting more fish on the hook than ever when you know how to entice them. These are forgiving fish and they forgive any angler willing to master this one simple secret fishing tip. In a very short span of time you "could" actually grab a fish, though I wouldn't. Where's the fun in that?

Did you know that fish will actually come to you rather than the other way around? It's true. If you move slow enough and don't move like a predator, which does include anxious anglers, fish will come to you. To the shock and horror of some fishermen I got into this river and sat on my butt...and waited. Everyone was screaming for me to get out of the water yet I wouldn't budge only asking that they give me a chance to prove a point. It was an experiment and if it didn't work I was willing to give each "fishing" angler the cost of what it would to purchase a fish in the store, which as you know are astronomical. I wasn't worried.

Five or six minutes passed and all the fish came back. They were within reaching distance of less than two feet. There were about 20 fishermen watching and stone silent at the same time. They couldn't believe it!

Everyone there wanted to know how I knew those fish would come back and at the same time held a clinic right there at the river's edge. As I understand it, all of them now fish without nets and are revered as fishing guru's in their respective towns. I'd like to think that's true, but what I know is you can make fish come to you instead of the other way around.
